NEWS FOR VETERANS

GI loans are expected to reach an all-time peak in the year 1955, according to a prediction by Mr. Thomas J. Sweeney, acting head of the Veterans Administration loan guaranty program.

In an address to a meeting of the National Association of Home Builders in Chicago, the VA official estimated that the volume of GI loans in the current year would exceed the record total set in 1954 by about seven and a half per cent.

Indications are, he said, that about 4.3 billion dollars will be earmarked by private lenders for the needs of veteran homebuyers. This would be the largest amount ever channeled into the veteran homebuying market by lenders in a single year.

The speaker qualified his prediction with the caution that any unexpected change of major proportions in the economic picture could radically alter the bases on which these predictions are laid.

His estimate was that an aggregate of about 20 billion dollars will

WINNERS NAMED IN SHEEP CONTEST

A Montgomery County farmer, Noah Bowers, has been named top in the 1954 "returns-per-ewe" contest. His average return per ewe was a whopping $48.22.

Other farmers in the top ten, in the order named, and their average returns, are: Paul L. Swecker Shenandoah, $41.20; Allen Rickard, Shenandoah, $40.61; W. I. Lunsford, Rockbridge, $39.42; Taylor Walker, Augusta, $39.15; T. J. Loving, Fluvana, $37.45; Earl Carper, Montgomery, $36.61; James A. Tilson, Rockbridge, $34.53; G. D. Kite, Culpeper, $33.14; and John K. Forrer, Augusta, $31.25.

The contest is sponsored by the county agents, the Virginia Sheep Breeders' Association, and the VPI animal husbandry department, for the purpose of encouraging more efficient sheep production in Virginia. Sowers received $35 award; Swecker, $20; Rickard, $10, and the others $5 each.

George A. Allen, Jr., associate animal husbandman at VPI, says any sheep owner in Virginia with 15 ewes or more is eligible to enter the contest. Deadline for entries this year is February 28.

Have an official count made of your ewes during February. Your county agent, vocational education instructor, soil conservation service representative, or any member of the Virginia Sheep Breeders' Association can do this. The count must include all the breeding ewes in the flock.

Good management and feeding practices are stressed throughout the contest.

TOPDRESS SMALL GRAINS EARLY

A quick boost to early feed production in 1955 is possible if you topdress fall-seeded small grains with nitrogen, preferably between February 1 and March 15.

G. R. Epperson, associate agronomist at VPI Agricultural Extension Service, says on grains that will be used for graining, silage or hay, or a combination, the rate of application should be 20 to 60 pounds of nitrogen per acre. Where small grains will be used for grain only, decrease the rate to the point where lodging will not be expected. Soils of low fertility and sandy soils need more nitrogen for efficient small grain production.

Generally, two to 3 pounds of nitrogen will increase small grain yields by one bushel per acre, although this will vary.

Costs of nitrogen fertilizer also will vary, but usually as the per cent nitrogen contained in the material increases, the price per pound of nitrogen decreases. In small grain production there is no apparent difference in the effect of nitrogen from various sources or in different nitrate fertilizer materials. The important thing is to get as much nitrogen as possible to use efficiently at the lowest possible cost per unit of plant food.

SEED MID-WINTER OATS AGRONOMIST ADVISES

A good way to get a head start on the usual rush of spring seeding is to seed winter varieties of oats in February.

W. W. Lewis, agronomist at VPI Agricultural Extension Service, says drouth and other factors caused many farmers to fail to seed as large an acreage of small grain last fall as they had planned.

Recommended varieties for eastern Virginia for February seeding are Arlington, Atlantic, Lee Cold Proof, Forkedeer, Fulgrain, Fulwood, and Victor Grain 48-93. In the rest of the state, recommended varieties are Arlington, Atlantic, Lee Cold Proof, and Forkedeer.

Seed as soon after February 1 as land can be prepared. Fertilize at the rate of 400 to 600 pounds per acre with a complete fertilizer, carrying as much nitrogen as can safely be used without danger of lodging.

February - seeded oats of winter varieties can generally be expected to give higher yields of better quality than spring varieties seeded later.
